St. Bernard Software Receives Prestigious PC Magazine Editors' Choice Award for iPrism

Appliance-based Internet Filter Wins Head-to-Head Competition Among Leading Content Filtering Providers

SAN DIEGO, Calif., August 29, 2001 – In the September 25, 2001 issue of PC Magazine, St. Bernard Software's iPrism Internet filtering appliance was awarded the prestigious PC Magazine Editors' Choice Award in a roundup of leading Internet filtering solutions. The roundup, which included extensive testing at PC Magazine's New York-based PC Labs facility, evaluated six content-filtering products designed for home and another six for business. iPrism, designed for use in both businesses and schools, received the top overall score in the business category and an overall rating of "excellent" in addition to the Editors' Choice award.

PC Magazine praised iPrism for its ease-of-use, effectiveness and return on investment. The article states, "On the business side, the manager looking to reclaim productivity and bandwidth lost to unauthorized employee surfing, and to minimize the threat of litigation from inappropriate surfing, should consider the St. Bernard iPrism. We liked that all we had to do was plug in the iPrism box, which runs preinstalled software. A hard-to-beat filtering system with daily updates from St. Bernard, 60 categories of filterable content, and a respectable collection of reporting tools make the iPrism the best return on a busy network administrator's time and money.”

“We are extremely honored to be recognized by the editors at PC Magazine,” said John Jones, President and CEO of St. Bernard Software. “We welcome the head-to-head competition that a roundup like this one provides and are confident that anyone who is serious about reclaiming lost productivity and bandwidth as a result of inappropriate web surfing should look no further than iPrism.”

iPrism offers a variety of impressive features that enables organizations to monitor and control Internet usage. This self-contained appliance is dedicated solely to Internet filtering, and delivers the following benefits:

- Reduced upfront costs and lower total cost of ownership
- Compatible with virtually any network configuration
- No additional hardware needed
- Nightly database updates included in annual subscription service
- Quick installation and administration
